Yagna was one of the largest Tongva villages, located just west of the LA River. It became the site of the City of Los Angeles after being developed by the Spanish and other settlers.

Source: This map was compiled from several sources, including consultation with Indigenous representatives. Data for Fernandeño Tataviam villages is attributed to Fernandeño Tataviam Band of Mission Indians (2015). Data for the Gabriélin Tongva sites and villages is based on “Mapping the Tongva Villages of L.A.’s Past” story map published by Sean Greene and Thomas Curwen via the Los Angeles Times on May 9, 2019.